The van was standing unused for about 5 days. This morning I found it completely dead. Unlocked it with a key, opened the sliding door and went to check the battery in the rear. Soon realized that the accessible battery ...

A 190 amp solar panel on a good sunshine day with no share will put in about 50 amp hours to the battery. So,, if the draw off your battery bank is more that 50 amp hours...then every day you use it...the battery will no longer be as full as the day before...and of course rainy days hasten the flatlining.

After reading about the difficulties accessing the frunk while dealing with a dead battery, and Porsche's less than ideal solution of the emergency frunk release located in a very hard to access location, I began exploring options to avoid the need to jack up the vehicle, remove the left front wheel and inner fender liner and attempt to grab the tiny stub of a cable ...
